Alaska - An Overview

The people, the places, and the beauty - it's like nothing on Earth. And when you visit, Alaska becomes a part of your soul forever. In fact, every Alaskan you meet will undoubtedly be able to tell the story of a personal friend and how they came to Alaska on vacation and never left.

From the breathtaking vistas of the highest peak in the nation, Denali (Mt. McKinley)... "The Great One," to the ice caves of the mysterious and spectacular Glacier Bay, Alaska has something for every visitor. Travel above the Arctic Circle and experience Alaska's native culture. A journey through South-central Alaska lets you appreciate the beauty of this great state at your own pace - on the most scenic highway in the world. Or travel to Katmai to experience Alaska's exotic wildlife. It sounds like a lot of activity, but these are only a small fraction of the adventures that await you in Alaska.

The primary factor to consider when planning your vacation is how much time you have to spend in Alaska, and plan your trip accordingly. If you have a week to spend in the state, consider exploring parts of just one of the regions that appeals to you. Alaska's size can be deceiving when you see it on a map. Alaska alone is one-fifth the size of the contiguous United States. Driving between Alaska's two major cities, Fairbanks to Anchorage is roughly the same distance as driving between San Diego and Phoenix, Houston and New Orleans or Boston and Baltimore.

Enjoying Our Great Outdoors

Alaska is full of outdoor adventures, from the mild to the wild. Raft a graceful river, or picnic near an Ice Age glacier. Skim the wilderness in a sturdy bush plane or helicopter, or drive for miles beside a turquoise river. Experience gold rush excitement aboard a sternwheeler, or try your hand fishing for Alaska's famous halibut and salmon. Whatever you do, the experience is one you'll never forget.

People-Powered Adventures

Alaska has trails for every ability, from accessible nature paths, to mountain hikes that are physically challenging. Cyclists, joggers, and walkers will discover that major communities have paved trails. Long-distance riders can use the highways, which vary in road surface and shoulder width. Kayak and canoe enthusiasts will enjoy Alaska's many rivers, streams, lakes, and protected coastal waters. Whatever the activity, visitors will find federal, state, and private campgrounds available all over Alaska; many have electrical hookups and dumping stations.

Adventures for Everyone

Adventures include charter fishing trips, sightseeing cruises, and flightseeing tours. The Alaska Railroad can take you in comfort through some of the world's most spectacular scenery. A visit to outlying communities will introduce you to activities as varied as the Eskimo blanket toss, or bird watching. In towns and cities you'll find cultural museums, and restaurants serving everything from fresh halibut to flavorful caribou stew. Visitor centers can guide you to local attractions and special events.

Shopping

Wherever you go, you'll find unique Alaskan products and crafts, including gold nugget jewelry and items carved from ivory and jade; handmade clothing and toys; collectors items made from skin, fur or bone; woven baskets of beach grass, bark and baleen;

Alaskan delicacies such as canned or smoked salmon, wild berry products, and reindeer sausage; Native seal oil candles, beaded mittens, fur mukluks, and miniature hand-carved totem poles. Look for the "Made in Alaska" logo, which indicates an item genuinely manufactured in Alaska, and the "Silver Hand" logo that identifies Native Alaskan handicrafts. Handcrafted items, made of walrus ivory and other by-products of subsistence hunting, provide an income source for Native Alaskan artisans and a valuable investment for the buyer.

Tours & Guided Trips

There are many established companies that can help you enjoy your Alaska experience. Companies offer a wide range of activities, from day trips to extended tours - there is something for everyone. Wilderness adventures can vary from short, guided hikes to rugged, backcountry treks. Tour operators cater to both novices and experts. Leave all the arrangements to a tour company or pick and choose for yourself. Even independent travelers often find it useful to include guided trips in their private itineraries.

Fishing

Alaska offers some of the most spectacular fishing in the world. It can be as easy as pulling to the side of the road and making a cast, or you can charter a boat to reel in one of Alaska's enormous halibut. Fly-in fishing, boat charters, luxury wilderness lodges, and fish camps offer a wilderness experience for adventurous anglers. Rivers, lakes and streams throughout the state offer the chance to hook trout, such as rainbows, cutthroat, and steelhead. In all, more than 627 fish species inhabit Alaska's salt and fresh waters, including five species of Pacific salmon: King (Chinook), red (sockeye), pink (humpy), silver (coho) and chum (dog). From smaller fish, like the feisty and beautiful Dolly Varden, to Alaska's famous King salmon, Alaska is an angler's paradise. You could even come away with a world record; a fish weighing over 97 pounds set the Alaska record for a King salmon.

Wild Game

Hunting in Alaska is a premier experience, in a hunting environment that is unique in the world. For many Alaska residents, hunting for food is a vital part of lifestyles emphasizing self-sufficiency and sustainable use. Wildlife is abundant in Alaska and populations are scientifically managed to ensure that they remain healthy. Alaska is famous for its huge moose, vast caribou herds, great brown bears, Dall sheep, mountain goats, and Sitka black-tailed deer.

Eco-Tourism

Alaska is a prime destination for eco-tourists seeking a more personal connection with nature, wilderness, and local people. Take your time, get out and walk. Breathe in the scents of spruce and wildflowers. Look at the way the past has shaped the geography and history of this land. Watch wildlife from a distance so that animals know they are safe. Many of Alaska's animals can become dangerous if they feel threatened, so use binoculars or a telephoto lens if you want to take a closer look. Talk to the locals. You'll discover a lot about Alaska's diverse cultures. Many Alaskans still live off the land as their ancestors did. Understanding their views and ways of interacting with the environment can enrich your visit.

Alaska Naturally

Whatever you want to see and do in Alaska, it's best to plan ahead and learn about special requirements that may apply to some wilderness areas. Travel restrictions often exist to protect the land and enhance every visitor's experience of Alaska's natural beauty. This report provides a profile for both the visitor and the professional tour packager of Alaska's adventuresome visitor market along with key contact information.

Market Profile

Tourism is Alaska's second largest private-sector employer, accounting for one in eight private-sector jobs. It is also Alaska's fastest-growing industry. The visitor industry is mainly composed of small businesses. Tourism is a leading industry in Southcentral, Southeast, and Interior Alaska, and it continues to grow in the Southwest and Far North regions. Winter tourism is also growing in many areas of the state.

Over 1.5 million visitors come to Alaska each year. The cruise industry reported 920,000 passengers in 2005, a 5.7% increase from the prior year. There was also significant growth in the number of non-stop flights from abroad. The majority of Alaska visitors come for pleasure; however, a significant number also come for business, conventions, and to visit family and friends. The average visitor is very well educated, has an average household income of $60,000, and is about 50 years old. Visitors to Alaska spent over $1.8 billion annually, equating to around $1300 on average, per person per trip. Visitors come to Alaska in the summer by air, cruise ship, highway, and the Alaska Marine Highway and by other means. The addition of Alaska Marine Highway System's first fast vehicle ferry, the MV Fairweather, should have a positive influence on how people will travel throughout Alaska. It began service in the summer of 2004 and provides quicker access between the upper Lynn Canal and Juneau, and between Sitka and Juneau.

Alaska Travel Industry Association asserts that the international market will maintain its recovery through continued marketing efforts and if international terrorism does not escalate. In the German market, indications are that charter flights to Anchorage and Fairbanks will continue to grow. Within the Pacific Rim, both Japan Airlines and Alaskan Vacations have increased their non-stop charter flights from Tokyo to Anchorage by approximately 25% over past seasons.

Economic Indicators for Alaska

The economic news in Alaska, unlike the national news, continues to remain upbeat. Alaska added jobs to its economy, continuing its impressive seventeen consecutive years of employment growth. Among Alaska's top industries of oil and gas, seafood, mining; tourism has experienced increased investment since 2004, specifically in hotel and cruise operators.

After several years of decline, Alaska bed tax collections have rebounded since 2004. With a recovering national economy, a weak dollar, and more local capacity, the economic fundamentals for Alaska's visitor industry are all positive. Hotels and food services dominate employment in this industry, and Anchorage has added substantial new hotel capacity. Four new hotels, the Aspen Suites Hotel, Homewood Suites-Hilton, Fairfield Inn, and Motel 6 have recently opened, adding 447 rooms to the city's total capacity. Several more are expected to open in 2007.

The broadly based services industry sectors will again combine to add the most jobs of any industry in Alaska. The recent hotel openings have contributed additional employment in both Fairbanks and Anchorage. In addition, the average annual growth rate for hotels and lodging places was predicted at 2.9 percent (7,200 in 2000 to a projected 9,300 in 2010).

Market Analysis

Visitor Origin

Today the Alaska tourism industry is chiefly dependent on the U.S. market. Following the U.S. is Germany (or German-speaking Europe), Canada, Japan and Australia. In a study conducted by the McDowell Group for the Alaska Tourism Marketing Needs Survey in June 2000, you can see in the tables below a listing of Alaska's current domestic and international markets and targets for future market development.

Trends in Arrivals

The following chart reports on travel arrivals for residents and non-residents by all modes of travel for years 1985 – 2004.

Alaska Total Arrivals
Source: COMMERCE, AVSP

The steady increase in visitor arrivals since 1994 reflects an average annual growth rate of nearly 4% over the past decade. Besides the strong passenger growth aboard cruise ships, domestic and international air arrivals have experienced average annual growth rates of 2.5% and 6.5% respectively. However, despite a doubling of motor coach arrivals the past decade, the total number of visitors entering Alaska by personal vehicles is down one third compared with ten years ago.

Alaska Economic Performance Report 2004

Total Arrivals

Total arrival data are collected throughout the year for each mode of arrival. Data come directly from the agency responsible for monitoring a particular mode of travel or the entity that provides the service.

- ◆ Total arrivals (residents and visitors combined) increased a remarkable 9 percent from 1,785,200 arrivals in Summer 2003 to 1,951,600 arrivals in Summer 2004.
- ◆ Cruise ship arrivals increased almost 15 percent, from 620,900 in Summer 2003 to 712,400 in Summer 2004. Another 162,800 visitors arrived in Alaska by some other mode and cruised south from Whittier, Seward, or Skagway. In addition, over 11,000 visitors took a multiple-night cruise within the state.
- ◆ Domestic air arrivals increased 7 percent, breaking the one million mark for the first time.
- ◆ Ferry arrivals reversed the decline of last year, and increased almost two percent. However, ferry arrivals did not return to their historic highs in the 30,000s.
- ◆ International air arrivals increased almost 20 percent, from 37,400 to 44,800 arrivals of visitors and residents. Some of the increase can be attributed to increases in the number of flights between Vancouver, BC and Anchorage and charter flights from Germany and Japan to Anchorage.

Cruise Ship Operators

Alaska cruises have become one of the most popular ways to visit Alaska, with Alaska being ranked as the #2 cruise destination in 2005. Cruises feature glaciers, wildlife, great food, entertainment, interesting port of calls and fascinating tours along way, all with only unpacking your suitcase once. The major cruise lines offer two main Alaska cruise options. Gulf of Alaska cruises travel between Vancouver, BC and Seward, while Inside Passage cruises travel roundtrip from Vancouver. Both cruises are a week long, and visit three or four ports along the way. Gulf of Alaska and Inside Passage cruises are available from top cruise lines like Princess Cruises, Holland America Line, Celebrity Cruises and Royal Caribbean Cruises. Ships range from 1200 to over 2000 passengers and are often called "cities on the water", with features like numerous restaurants, lounges, Broadway style entertainment, casinos, health clubs, movie theaters, libraries, and more. In addition to the traditional cruises available from the major cruise lines, there are several options available with small ship cruise operators. Whether you choose a big or small ship, all cruises have shore excursions available in each port, from historic railroad trips to landing on a glacier by helicopter. After a great Alaska cruise, most passengers continue on to see Alaska by land with Denali National Park on the top of the list. The Alaska cruise season runs from approximately the second week of May through the third week of September. Each of these topics is explored in more detail below; links to cruise line home pages are also included.

Travel Within Alaska

Alaska Railroad

The Alaska Railroad is the last full-service railroad in the United States. From the tidewater at Whittier and the Seward to the heart of the Interior Alaska, the railroad route covers more than 805 kilometers. Summer services offer three daily routes. The Denali Star departs daily from Anchorage and Fairbanks with stops at Talkeetna and Denali. The Coastal Classic serves Anchorage and Seward, with magnificent walls of ice, jagged peaks and gorges along this route. The Glacier Discovery connects Anchorage and Whittier, winding along the scenic Turnagain Arm of the Cook Inlet. In addition to daily service routes, The Hurricane Turn offers a unique "flag" service between Talkeetna and Hurricane Gulch, providing a vital transportation link for rural Alaskans. In 2000, the Railroad added 16 state-of-the-art locomotives, nine custom-built passenger coaches and three vista dome-style coaches to the fleet.

Ferry System

The State of Alaska operates a system of large and small ferries serving many communities in Southeast Alaska as well as Bellingham, Washington (161 kilometers north of Seattle). These vessels carry cars, campers, etc., as well as passengers. At most stops there is time for passengers to explore the town before the ferry leaves for the next stop. This is the most economical way to travel around the region - many passengers bring tents to camp on deck, or just sleeping bags and pillows and 'crash' on the rugs, sofas, etc. Most vessels have cabins as well and all vessels offer meal service - usually cafeteria style.

Flightseeing

One of the best ways to see a lot of Alaska in a short time is flightseeing, in a variety of small aircraft ranging from Cessna 185s to float planes. For those whose flying experience is thus far limited to large jetliners carrying several hundred people, there's something special about climbing aboard aircraft carrying as few as four passengers to see Mt. McKinley, Prince William Sound, ice fields, glaciers, fjords and wildlife on and off shore.

Pilots with extensive experience in the tour area often double as tour guides, pointing out areas of environmental and historic significance. Going anywhere in Alaska by small aircraft, on business or for pleasure, offers a great view of the Great Land.

Motor Coach

From a town tour that takes in historic and cultural sites, to a journey over Alaska's farthest-north highway to Prudhoe Bay, motor coaches are a popular choice for viewing the Great Land. Tour operators, knowing visitors want to do as much as possible on their once-in-a-lifetime trip to Alaska, accommodate with side trips such as exploring Denali National Park, river running, or flying to a real family-run gold mine in the Brooks Range.

Motor coach trips, like cruises, are generally a package deal that may include admission to museums, award-winning video films at stops along the way, a ride on a ski lift, a cruise aboard a sternwheeler in the Interior, a shuttle-bus ride through a national park, a trip to an historic mining town, meals and lodging. Some companies also offer optional add-on adventures. Often a motor coach tour is one leg of the trip, the other being a flight or cruise to or from the state.

Recreational Vehicles

Renting an RV to travel Alaska is often a great choice for those looking for added flexibility in their Alaska vacation, and those who want to "rough it" in style with most of the comforts of home. Whatever the case, more and more people are turning to Alaska RV rental companies to plan their perfect Alaska vacation. While many people drive their own RV to Alaska, a substantial number choose to rent their RV in Anchorage. There are over a dozen firms offering Alaska RV rentals in Anchorage, from 6.7m class C motorhomes to 9m class A motorhomes.

The most popular rental model is the class C motorhome that is generally available in 6.7m to 9m lengths. Most rental RVs are fully self contained, meaning that in addition to beds and seating, expect a bathroom with toilet and shower, stove, refrigerator, kitchen sink, hot water heater and furnace. Many of the top Alaska RV rental companies offer air conditioning, microwave, and generators at no extra charge. If you are renting from a top firm, expect your motorhome to be less than 3 years old.

Start early if you plan to rent an RV in Alaska. Advance reservations are required and many companies are sold out by springtime. A deposit is generally required to rent an RV, and strict cancellation penalties are common. Some firms charge extra for mileage, kitchen set ups, bedding, insurance, dumping or cleaning, so make sure you ask about extra fees so you know the total cost of your rental. Expect to pay $165 to $195 per day for a nice, well-equipped RV, depending on the rental company and motorhome size. Discounts are often available for May or September rentals. No special license is required to operate an RV in Alaska, and most rental companies give an orientation prior to your departure.

Rental Cars

Many people choose to rent a car when they travel to Alaska. Rental cars can add flexibility to your Alaska vacation, and can often result in a cost savings over other modes of transportation, particularly for groups of 3 to 5 travelers.

Major car rental companies are available in Anchorage, Fairbanks and Seward, as well as a number of small communities across Alaska. Most Alaska travelers rent their cars at or near the Anchorage airport, where nearly all the national rental car companies are represented. Anchorage currently has an 8% rental car tax (in addition to 10% state tax), and other fees typically apply for those picking up at the airport, and can sometimes be avoided by choosing an "off airport" pick up location. One-way car rentals between Anchorage, Fairbanks or Seward are often available but typically a drop fee or higher daily rental rate will apply.

Alaska Leisure Activities

Summer

During the summer months, there are about 22 hours of daylight. This allows for a lot of different activities to take place. Below is a list of ideas:

Flightseeing	Rafting	ATV Activities

Winter

For those that enjoy winter, Alaska offers a wide range of activities from Nordic skiing on groomed trails to dog sledding to remote cabins. Some of the most common activities during the winter season include:

Aurora Viewing	Ice Fishing	Skiing/Snowboarding
Camping	Ice Skating	Skijoring
Dog Sledding	Mountaineering	Snowmachining
Flightseeing	Opera	Symphony
Hot Springs	Photography
Ice Climbing	Sightseeing

Alaska Sporting Events

From the Slush Cup to the Iditarod, Alaska offers winter competitions that range from quirky to those that attract the nation's top television networks. Several cross-country ski races are held each year. The largest, the Alaska Nordic Ski Cup Series, determines contestants for the Arctic Winter Games and Junior Olympic competitions. Other winter sporting events include the Alaska Native Games, and Iron Dog 2000. The Great Alaska Shootout is one of the country's premier pre-season college basketball tournaments, attracting NCAA Division I teams from across the nation for a three-day event that draws sell-out crowds to Anchorage.

In a state where hockey is played year-round, it is no surprise that Anchorage and Fairbanks offer University of Alaska hockey games, as well as the top-rated semi-professional Alaska Aces. In Barrow, the Christmas Games feature Alaska Native traditional tests of skill and strength in events like the high kick, the ear pull and the knuckle hop. In April, one of the state's most well known competitions is the World Extreme Skiing Championships in Valdez. The annual Slush Cup in Girdwood marks the ski season's end.

Below is an overview of the major sporting events that take place throughout Alaska annually. In addition to these events, Alaska was also the host for the 2001 Special Olympic Winter Games.

Carrs/Safeway Great Alaska Shootout

Only in Anchorage, Alaska will you find a bunch of college basketball teams going head-to-head in a national competition called the Carrs/Safeway Great Alaska Shootout. It's a melting pot full of sports lovers, athletes, NBA recruiters, and media.

The Great Alaska Shootout is one of only four preseason NCAA tournaments in the country, giving teams a three-game head start on the December beginning of Division I basketball. Visiting coaches have praised the hospitality, the officiating and most of all, the level of competition. The annual event takes place over the Thanksgiving holiday, so visitors can enjoy the wonderful winter and holiday activities in Anchorage as well as some of the hottest basketball in the country.

The Carrs/Safeway Great Alaska Shootout has been the springboard to success for many Final Four teams, several of which are broadcast on ESPN and ESPN2.

Fur Rendezvous

Fur Rendezvous began in 1935 with the main focus of the festival being to bring people together, to show community support and celebrate the beginning of the end of winter. Because fur trading was the second leading industry in Alaska at the time, fur trading became an important part of the festival. It provided a golden opportunity for trappers and buyers to meet in Anchorage to ply their trade and cut out the middleman. Trapping contests were held, and prizes were awarded for the longest fox, the best fox and the finest ermine pelts.

Today, Anchorage Fur Rendezvous takes place mid-February and is one of the largest winter festivals in North America, with estimates of over 67% of the population participating in Rondy.

Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race

Billed as “the last great race on earth”, the race officially commemorates the 1925 Serum Run to Nome. Starting in Anchorage, the mushers travel about 1,850 kilometers from checkpoint to checkpoint, similar to what the freight mushers did over eighty years ago.

Alaska is the world Mecca for sled dog racing which has developed into a popular winter sport in the Lower 48, Canada, Europe, and even Russia. Mushers from more than a dozen foreign countries have run the Iditarod. The Winter Olympics committee is even considering adding sled dog racing as an event.

Iditasport

The Iditasport is the most popular winter human-powered adventure race in the world. Slated for early spring, racers have right up to race start to declare their mode of human-powered transportation: ski, bike, or foot. 1,770 kilometers up the Iditarod Trail to Nome! You will not find a more envelope pushing, on the edge, out there, life-changing adventure race anywhere! This race is designed for the serious racer looking for that once-in-a-lifetime adventure experience.

World Extreme Ski Championships

In April thirty-eight of the world's craziest and best skiers compete in the World Extreme Skiing Championships (WESC) on the slopes of the Chugach Mountain range, which encircles the Alaskan port of Valdez. The competition's slopes are at a 35- to 55-degree angle, with descents of 600 to 900 meters.

This competition is the culmination of over a half-dozen very tough qualifying events around the world, including competitions in Japan, South America, Europe, and the USA. At the World Extreme Skiing Championships, there are three days of competitive skiing, with the terrain and slopes getting progressively more difficult. Rocks, narrow gorges, and sheer cliffs are part of the mix.

Over a thousand spectators and competitors visit the snowy Chugach Mountains near Valdez each year to watch the World Extreme Skiing Championships and pump up their adrenaline.

Travel Safety Tips

- Traveler's checks and/or credit cards are recommended and carry only the cash you need.
- Keep plane tickets, ...etc in safe place
- Bring copies of passport, credit cards and tickets and keep in hotel safe.
- Never pick up hitchhikers.
- Report lost/stolen items to hotel management and to the police.
- Take valuables with you or leave in the hotel safety deposit box.
- If using a rental car, leave maps, travel brochures and valuables in the glove compartment or trunk.
- Take bags and valuables inside overnight
- Build your awareness of surroundings by reviewing information of the community you are visiting.
- For safety and preservation of wild life, do not try to touch or feed wild animals.
- When attempting any outdoor activity, like hiking, kayaking or camping, make sure to bring the proper precautionary equipment such as bear spray, ample water and first-aid equipment.
- DO NOT throw objects at wild animals.
- DO NOT walk on the mudflats! Although beautiful, the sand along Cook Inlet, near Anchorage is composed of glacial silt and acts like quick sand.
- Alaska State law requires the use of safety helmets while bicycling or skating.
- Alaska State law requires all persons traveling by automobile wear seatbelts.
